

General Dynamics Bath Iron Works, Union Reach Deal

RESTON, Va. – General Dynamics announced Aug. 8 that the negotiating teams from Bath Iron Works and the International Association of Machinists and Aerospace Workers (IAM) Local S6 reached agreement on mutually acceptable terms to end the ongoing strike by shipyard workers in Bath, Maine.

Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service deputy director Rich Giacalone and IAM International President Robert Martinez helped to facilitate the tentative agreement.

“We are pleased to have reached agreement with our union partners and look forward to getting back to the job of building ships for the U.S. Navy,” said Phebe Novakovic, chairman and CEO. “We greatly appreciate the assistance of Director of Trade and Manufacturing Policy Peter Navarro and AFL-CIO Metal Trades Department President Jimmy Hart for their help in bringing the parties together.”

About 4,300 members of the Local S6 have been on strike since June 22. The agreement is subject to ratification vote by the union’s members.
